

Marking Your Front Hairline

To achieve the most natural look, it's crucial to place the front of your hair system in the right position. But if you no longer have a growing front hairline, you may wonder where the front of your system should be placed. These instructions will help you easily establish the correct position for your front hairline. Don't be intimidated – finding where your natural hairline should begin is easier than you think.

Step 1: Locate your front hairline

To begin, raise your eyebrows as high as you can without tilting your head back.

Next, gently run your fingers up the center of your forehead until you reach the area where soft facial tissue meets the harder tissue. This is where your natural front hairline begins.

Lay your index finger horizontally on your forehead so the bottom of your finger sits on top of the soft tissue. To find the center point, turn your finger to align vertically with your nose.

Step 2: Mark the center point

Use your makeup pencil or marker to mark a small center point above your finger.
